Oppression and Mental Health

Guest Editor: Dr. Silvia Tenenbaum

Oppression is a pressing social issue that threatens the mental health of individuals and communities. This social malaise continues to reproduce a social condition in which individuals and communities live in ongoing threat of repression and erosion of their mental health.

This special issue will focus on lessons learned from around the globe in relation to “just and safe practices” as well as challenges faced by mental health providers that work under healthy parameters within toxic environments and institutions. By sharing successful new initiatives from various geographic settings, post-pandemic equitable mental health promotion practices can be applied.
