

Editorial

It is my pleasure to launch the inaugural issue of the Journal of Concurrent Disorders (JCD), the first peer reviewed journal solely dedicated to the examination of the co-occurrence of mental disorders and addictions (including substance and behavioral addictions).

I am pleased by the caliber of our editorial board and the expertise they bring to the journal. Our open access, peer-reviewed journal is launched with the hopes of distributing knowledge broadly with a focus on publishing both empirical and theoretical articles. Our journal will function as an open platform to inform and advance the ongoing debate on the concurrent nature of mental disorders and addictions that affect individuals and communities.

On behalf of our editorial team, I would like to extend our gratitude to the contributing authors to this inaugural issue. We look forward to your continued interest and contributions.

Best wishes,

Masood Zangeneh, Ph.D.
